Most of my friends did not encourage me when they heard that I wanted to pursue further graduate education in the family nurse practitioner program. However, I did not mind them; I had a clear plan in my life. This was my intellectual door to advance in my career and achieve all of my professional goals. This has all along been my childhood dream and I am not afraid of going down this path.

I have chosen to enroll in the family nurse practitioner program because I have a big heart for helping out the sick. I have always admired exemplary nursing theorists who have made huge impacts on the nursing field. This is one of my convincing reasons for wanting to pursue further graduate education.

I am interested in making my contribution to the betterment of humanity; I always want to be where the action is as well as challenge and leave an impact behind. I have come a very long way in getting myself prepared for this path. I have close friends and family who have always encouraged me. I am sure that the knowledge and experience I would gain from this program will facilitate my career ambitions as well as professional goals.

When I think about seeking further graduate education in the family nurse practitioner program, I get filled up with a growing tide of excitement. The realization that I can finally get to specialize in my educational goals is appealing. My desire to advance my career path in nursing is manifested by the fact that I offered myself as a volunteer in a clinic near our residence. Most importantly, I accept ant challenges that are ahead of me, they are what makes me stronger each day. My advice to any individual out there with no morale of seeking graduate education is that, make a choice and channel all your efforts into developing your career and talent.
